Have you ever replaced a light bulb and wondered why the room still looked dim? There is a good chance the fixture itself was the problem. Glass shades, chandelier crystals and ceiling domes collect dust, grease and the occasional unlucky insect, and all of it blocks light. Cleaning light fixtures is one of the specialized house cleaning tasks offered by The Happy Housekeepers, which has served Roanoke homeowners since 1979.

Most people never think about light fixtures until they notice a shadow in the bottom of a glass dome. By then, months or even years of build-up may be sitting there. Kitchen fixtures pick up a greasy film from cooking, bathroom vanity lights gather residue from steam and hair products and dining room chandeliers hold dust on every arm and crystal.

Cleaning fixtures properly takes care and patience. Shades and globes need to be handled gently, and the crew works carefully around bulbs and wiring. It is exactly the kind of task that gets skipped when homeowners clean on their own, because it involves ladders, fragile glass and awkward angles.
