

How Long You Have to File a Car Accident Claim in Texas Two years. For most car accident injury claims in Texas, that is how long you have to file a lawsuit, counted from the date of the crash. The rule comes from Section 16.003 of the Texas Civil Practice and Remedies Code, and courts take it seriously. Miss the deadline and you may lose the right to recover anything at all, no matter how clear the other driver's fault was or how badly you were hurt. People often ask whether the clock ever pauses or starts late. Texas law does have some exceptions, but they are narrow and depend on specific facts, so it is risky to assume one applies to you. Wrongful death claims generally follow the same two-year window. The safest approach is to treat the two-year deadline as firm and talk to a Midland car accident lawyer well before it gets close, ideally in the first weeks after the crash. An early conversation costs nothing, and it gives you a clear date to plan around instead of a guess. It also means someone is watching the calendar while you focus on doctor visits and getting back to work. Another common question is why anyone should hurry if two years sounds like plenty. The answer is evidence. Skid marks on Loop 250 fade within days. Businesses along Wadley Avenue or Garfield Street may record over their camera footage within a week or two. Vehicles get repaired or sold for salvage. Witnesses who stopped to help on Interstate 20 forget details, change phone numbers or leave town when their oilfield rotation ends. Medical records are also clearer when treatment starts soon after the crash, and insurance adjusters often read a long gap in care as a Midland Car Accident Lawyer sign that you weren't really hurt.

Consistent treatment records, doctor notes and a daily pain journal help. The Midland team investigates beyond the police report to build evidence that insurers can't easily dismiss. Can I get compensation for anxiety after a car accident? Yes, Texas law allows recovery for mental anguish when it is tied to the crash and properly documented. Fear of driving, trouble sleeping and panic attacks after a wreck on I-20 or SH 191 are real harms. Most crash claims settle through insurance without anyone being personally sued, especially when the at-fault driver carries at least the Texas minimum of 30/60/25 coverage.
