Why Is Reporting Important?

- It ensures your injury is documented.
- It helps establish a timeline for your case.
- It protects you if complications arise later.

Don't: Delay Reporting Your Injury

Failing to report your injury promptly can jeopardize your claim. Delays can lead employers or insurance companies to question the legitimacy of your injury.

Consequences of Delayed Reporting:

- Denial of workers' compensation claims.
- Difficulty in obtaining necessary medical treatment.
- Increased stress during recovery.

Do: Seek Medical Attention

Whether it's minor or severe, seeking medical attention should be one of your top priorities post-injury. Getting checked out by healthcare professionals ensures that any underlying issues are promptly addressed.

Why Is Medical Attention Crucial?

- It documents your injuries for future claims.
- Medical records serve as vital evidence in legal cases.
- Early treatment can prevent complications down the line.

Don't: Underestimate Your Injuries

Even if you feel fine immediately after an accident, it's wise not to dismiss potential injuries. Adrenaline can mask pain temporarily, leading you to believe you're uninjured.

Risks of Ignoring Injuries:

- Long-term consequences that could have been avoided with early intervention.
- Increased difficulty in proving your case later on.

Do: Document Everything Related to Your Accident

Keep detailed records regarding every aspect of your accident—from how it happened to what injuries were sustained.

What Should You Document?

1. The time and place of the incident
2. Names and contact information of witnesses

While discussing details with supervisors or HR is important, verbal conversations may not hold weight without written documentation.

Why Written Records Matter:

- They serve as palpable proof in disputes.

1. Guidance through filing workers' compensation claims
2. Assistance in gathering necessary documentation

Why Is This Important? Signing documents without understanding their implications might limit future claims or result in unfair settlements.
