Your phone opens apps by itself, types gibberish into messages, or taps buttons while it sits untouched on the table. That odd behaviour has a name, ghost touch, and it can be genuinely maddening when it happens while you are trying to answer a call. Free Fusion deals with ghost touch problems in Corby, and in most cases there is a logical explanation behind what looks like a haunted phone.

The usual suspects are physical. A cracked screen can send false signals along the touch layer, particularly around the damaged area. A poorly fitted or damaged screen protector can do the same, as can moisture trapped under the glass or a case that squeezes the edges of the phone. Charging with a worn or mismatched cable sometimes triggers phantom touches too, since electrical noise can confuse the sensors. Trying a different charger is a cheap first test. Ghost touch is also a good reason not to ignore an early crack. Once a fracture reaches the touch layer, the false inputs tend to get more frequent over time, and the phone becomes harder to switch off or back up. People often put up with an odd phone for weeks, only to find it unusable on the day they need it most.

Before bringing the phone in, work through a few steps. Remove the case and the screen protector and see whether the behaviour changes. Restart the phone, and phone screen repair check whether it only happens while charging. Make sure the software is up to date. If the ghost touches continue with the phone unplugged, bare and freshly restarted, a failing display is the most likely cause, and a repair rather than a reset is probably what is needed.

We carry out a diagnostic check before suggesting any work, free for local customers, so you will know whether it is the screen, the battery or something else. If a new display is the answer, iPhone screens at Free Fusion start from £24.99, and other models are quoted after inspection. Most smartphone screen replacements are completed within about an hour at the Corby centre, and repairs are backed by a warranty. We are an independent specialist, not an Apple Store.

Back up as much as you can before the phone becomes impossible to use, because ghost touch can sometimes delete or send things by accident. When you are ready, ring 01536 260 558 or walk in to 62a High St, Corby. If you live outside the area, postal repairs are accepted from across the UK, and devices that arrive by Royal Mail or DPD are typically tested and dispatched the same day.
