If you have ever opened a Roanoke basement door and watched a pale, humpbacked insect leap straight at you, you have met a camel cricket. Sometimes called spider crickets, these insects thrive in the damp basements, crawl spaces and garages common across the Roanoke Valley. Perdue Exterminators offers cricket extermination as one of its core services, and it is a more common request than most people expect.

Camel crickets do not bite and they do not chirp, but they breed in large numbers where moisture stays high. They chew on https://zukoski-group.chbe.illinois.edu/index/index.php/DIY_Pest_Control_vs_Professional_Exterminators_Roanoke_Homeowners fabric, cardboard and stored items, and their sheer numbers make basements unpleasant to use. Field crickets are the louder relatives that move inside in late summer and fall, keeping people awake with their chirping. Both kinds are drawn by humidity, which Virginia provides in abundance from May through September. Because they are often active at night and hide in clutter during the day, many homeowners only realize how large the population has grown when they move boxes or clean out a storage room.

Older homes in Roanoke neighborhoods like Raleigh Court, Grandin and Old Southwest often have stone or block foundations, partially finished basements and crawl spaces that never fully dry out. Those conditions are ideal for camel crickets. Newer homes with unconditioned crawl spaces or basements that back up to wooded slopes in Cave Spring and Hidden Valley see them as well.

Combining Treatment With Moisture Control

Perdue's approach is to treat the areas where crickets live and enter, then pest control company Roanoke reduce the conditions that let them thrive. A dehumidifier in the basement, repaired gutters and downspouts, and sealed gaps around doors and basement windows all make a real difference. Because Perdue also helps eliminate and control crawl space mold, the same visit can address the moisture problem that is attracting both crickets and mold in the first place.

Crickets are also food for spiders, which explains why homes with heavy cricket activity tend to have lots of webs. Clearing out crickets often brings spider numbers down as a side benefit. Perdue's technicians will look at the whole basement environment, including stored boxes, firewood and laundry areas, and explain what changes will help results last.
